Free Lunch For Military Families

MyFoxNY.com -- A New York City internet company wants to do something special for folks who have family members serving in harm's way in Iraq or Afghanistan. The company - Dulcinea Media - is offering a free lunch on Wednesday at Bobby Van's Steakhouse in Manhattan.
Company spokeswoman Jen O'Neill says we hear a lot about supporting the troops - but their families need support too - "especially if there's an empty chair at the Thanksgiving table."
Offering them lunch the day before Thanksgiving is a chance to families to support each other and be thanked for their sacrifice.
O'Neill says there is no army base in New York City - where families could go to meet and network with other people who have military personnel overseas.
She says Dulcinea Media is asking local armories and congresspeople for a list of military families in the New York metro area who might want to gather for lunch.
She expects about 100 families will take part on Wednesday.
O'Neill says families with loved ones currently in Afghanistan or Iraq can call 212-685-7307.
